DIVING AT SEBASTOPOL. A letter describing the operations at Sebastopol for raising the sanken Russian ships, relates the following incident: "November 5 .- We had a terrible excitement on board one day last week. One of the divers (Harris, the English marine,) a first rate tellow, and bold as a lion, goes down examining the outs do of the ship on which they are at work. He had been forward and was going aft, along the bottem, in sixty feet of water, when he suddenly sigpaled for more air, and though the pressure was instantly increased, two more signals for "air" and "to come up," followed in rapid succession, and then ceased all reply to signels given. Thinking the fault was in the air-pump, the speed was increased until a pipe bursting near the engine, showed that the bose was foul. Then they shouted to the other diving party, in a row-boat at a little distance to come to the rescue. That diver was brought up by his tenders, and they commenced rowing for the steamer. Meanwhile, poor flarris made no more response to the anxious signalling of his tenders, and they had tried in vain to haul him upthe "life-line" was also foul. The pump was kept slowly in motion, but no bubbles came up from the water, and we knew that no air was reaching him' The row tout was coming as fast as possible, but I thought it never would arrive. At last they came alongside. The diver's helmet was closed, strong hands worked rapidly and silently; and in an instant he was lowered out of sight, the bose of his sufficating companion in his hand; there was an interval of two or three minutes of fearful suspense, in which no word was spoken by any of the score of men gathered there, save one whisper-"It must

Suddenly a second column of rising airbubbles appeared. "The hose is clearedbe has air," several voices spoke eagerly.-Then followed the signal for rising, and up they came-poor Harris all stark and metionleses. "Stop the pump, he is dead," said one, unscrewing the eyc-glass, through which he saw the ghastly countenance and frothy lips. But the cold air striking his livid face, the eyelids half opened and closed again. "He is alive," they all cried joyfully, and removing the unsightly helmet and dashing water on his head and breast, he give satisfaction. J. F. & L. A. LARKIN, presently began to breathe perceptibly, and after an hour's diligent rubbing from as many strong and willing hands as could get around him, he began to come to consciousness. He suffered great pain for hours in the covered, and diving as usual. On the whole, it was such an occurrence as I hope may not happen here again; that ten minutes, in which we had the consciousness that a man was dying for want of assistance which we could by no means give, I cannot think of without a shudder. The hose had got fast under a port-cover in such a way as to cut off the air suddenly and entirely. The lifeline was fast on some old rigging down in the mud under the bottom of the ship. where he had crawled in his zealous search after holes or injuries. He owes his life to the coolness and dexterity of the other diver, who providentially followed the hose and cleared it before descending to him, thus giving him air two minutes sooper than he could otherwise have received it, and it came

GEORGE H SMOOT. after substituting beavy flanuel drawers, cocke. &c., for the ordinary apparel. Once tucked into this ample casing, the head is covered with a close-fitting woolen cap, the breast plate and helmet of iron put on, the latter a hollow globe, much larger of course, than the head, and provided with three little windows, grated and glazed, called eye-glasses; the front one is always open while dresing. The upper part of the dress is now fastened to the breast-plate, being placed between its edge and a covering metallic rim which is then firmly screwed to its place by means of a wrench, making the connection water-tight. Heavy cowhide brogans, with soles of lead three quarters of an inch thick, strong rubber rings for the wrist which prevent water from entering the sleeve, and the girdle of shot, weighing some seventy-five pounds, complete the tiring. The life-line is tied round the waist, the sheath-kife placed in his belt, the pump is started, the eye-glass screwed in, and he is ready to descend. The dress being now filled with air, the shapeless body and limbs of the monster swelling to a size fitting that of his head, making altogether a hideous figure which you are not fidence. sorry to see vanish out of sight, wondering what sort of a reception the mermaids will give him if he falls in their way. | The fish are not afraid of them - they sometimes bring up a pocketful] The hose which supplies this air is of guita percha, of half inch bore, and attached to the helmet just at the bump of self-esteem. The life-line, by which signals are transmitted, is passed through a est motions are felt. He usually descends but is sometimes lowered by the life-line from the first. The pressure of air is gradually increased as be goes lower, more force being required, of course, to supply the air. If the pump is worked by hand it requires four men to tend it -two turning at once, and frequently changing. Two "tenders" stand by -- one bolding the bose, the other the life-line, the latter literally holding the diver's life in his hand, as inattention to signals frequently might cause his death. Once on the bottom, or on the ship, our mer-man walks about or works as elsewhere. Our givers for three months past have averaged perhaps four and a half hours under water, and hard at work, per diem. They have frequently, however, en down six and over eight hours, in water from thirty to sixty feet deep. They can descend in water one hundred and fifty feet deep, but do not like to work deeper than one handred, the increased pressure sensibly affecting the head at a greater depth. It would be interesting to know upon what physical characteristics the ability to endure the pressure meritable in descending upon George K. Witmer, water depends. I can discover no difference Benjamin Barton, in quantity or quality of brain or lungs between some who can stay down hours with. S. Ferguson Beach, out inconvenience, and others who cannot go at all, or who, on trial, have suffered long and severely after coming up from the mereest experimental dives. And the regular divers are of various temperaments; but one thing is common to all-that is, broad shoulders and deep chests; thus, large lungs are indispensable, I fancy; but that is not all, for some of the best provided in that respect have been unable to stay.
